Special Session 5: Advanced Nanomaterials for Precision Cancer Theranostics

Organizer

Prof. He Ding

Harbin Engineering University, China

Introduction

Precision cancer theranostics represents a rapidly advancing frontier in biomedical research, yet conventional strategies are hindered by low detection sensitivity, limited therapeutic specificity, insufficient catalytic efficiency and challenges in clinical translation. Advanced nanomaterials offer unique advantages in structural design, energy conversion, interface regulation, and biological compatibility, providing powerful solutions to overcome these bottlenecks. This session focuses on cutting-edge developments in functional nanomaterials for synergistic tumor therapy and high-sensitivity biosensing. It aims to foster interdisciplinary communication and accelerate the translation of novel nanoplatfroms from laboratory research to clinical applications. More info about special session 5,
